5. Are There Prescription Drug Addiction Treatment Centers?

While it would be nice if we could view all prescription drugs as safe, it's just not the case. It is true that prescription drugs have been approved by the US Food and Drug Administration. However, it's important to know that all drugs have the potential for side effects and some have the potential to create addiction. Therefore, whenever your doctor prescribes a medicine to you, you should understand everything that you can about that medicine and how to take it. You should also be honest with any doctor about your history with addiction as this may impact what drugs are prescribed to you. At Evolve Indy, we offer a wide range of programs at our prescription drug addiction treatment center that will help you break free of addiction.

Are Prescription Drugs Addictive?

Not all prescription drugs are addictive, but many are. Prescription drugs such as opioids, benzodiazepines, and stimulants can be very addictive. It is important to understand that your doctor prescribed these drugs because they felt that the benefits outweighed the risks. However, the risks do exist. It's imperative that you understand those risks and take your medications as prescribed. Prescription opioids include drugs like Oxycontin, Percocet, and Fentanyl. While opioids are often prescribed for short-term pain, their use can create a euphoric feeling that makes you want to take more than prescribed.

Benzodiazepines such as Xanax or Valium are effective in treating anxiety in the short term, but you can become dependent on these medications quickly. Stimulants such as Adderall and Ritalin can be a lifesaver for those suffering from ADHD but also have significant abuse potential. All of these medications are useful in treating different conditions, but can all be addictive. It is important to take all prescription drugs as prescribed. If you find that you are taking them more often than prescribed or at higher doses than prescribed, it may be time to consider contacting a prescription drug addiction treatment center.

Signs of Prescription Drug Addiction

Whether a drug is prescribed to you or not, the signs of addiction will be similar. As you think about your relationship with the drugs prescribed to you, you will want to ask yourself some hard questions.

- Are you taking the drug as prescribed? Have you started taking it more often than prescribed? Have you started taking a higher dosage than prescribed?
- Are you lying about continuing to use the prescription drug?
- Are you focused on when your next dose can be taken?
- Do you find yourself counting the days until you can refill your prescription?
- Are you running out of medication before the prescription is due to be refilled?

If you can answer yes to any of these questions, it may be time to consider going to a prescription drug addiction treatment center. When your use of prescription drugs takes over your life and becomes your central focus, it's time to ask for help.
