

Evolve Indy: Addiction Treatment For Ohio Residents

Addiction is a serious disease ravaging the country and Ohio hasn't been spared. This state has some of the highest levels of drug abuse with the CDC ranking it among the top 5 states with more than 10,000 residents suffering from either drug or alcohol addiction. This has huge ramifications not only on the addicts but also on their families and the community at large.

The high number of people struggling with addiction has pushed up the need for addiction treatment services and rehab programs in Ohio. Since addiction has the power to destroy an individual's finances, health, and relationships, it can turn a person's life around and wreak havoc on their work, family, and community.

If you have a loved one struggling with substance addiction, you know how crushing it can be. It's painful and difficult to watch them struggle and you may be asking yourself "How do I help them?"

If you are the one living with a substance use disorder, you may realize that you need help. However, fear of treatment, lack of knowledge on how to get help, or even embarrassment at your current situation may be keeping you from seeking treatment.

Why Addiction Treatment is Worth the Travel

Luckily, you don't have to continue living with addiction. Professional help is available to help you find renewed hope in sobriety. Excellent addiction treatment centers are situated throughout the country and the biggest challenge might be to settle on one that meets your unique needs.

If you are considering addiction treatment, it is best not to confine yourself to your home state. Expanding your search to a neighboring state can give you a wider selection to choose from. There are numerous drug and alcohol abuse rehab centers in Indiana that can help you turn your life around and with a little research, you can settle on an excellent one.

Here are some of the benefits of attending rehab treatment center out of state

It'll give you a fresh perspective.

Traveling from Ohio for addiction treatment will help reinforce the idea that this is a monumental step towards sobriety. It can give you a feeling of starting over somewhere new, taking you out of your daily routine. This, in turn, allows you to have a fresh perspective on your life, helping you see your addiction a problem in a new light. Being in a completely new environment can also motivate you to have a new beginning and jump-start the treatment and healing process.

You'll get away from negative influences.

Another benefit of traveling from Ohio to seek addiction treatment is that it will take you from the negative environment in Ohio that contributed to your substance abuse. Putting distance between you and your old friends, stressful relationships and other triggers makes it much easier to focus on your treatment and sobriety. There won't be any temptations to relapse and it might be easier to start on your new life.

It helps protect your privacy.

While you may have come to terms with your addiction, you may not want others around you –either your friends, work colleagues or family members- to know that you're checking into a rehab center. You might want to protect your professional reputation or your spouse and children from gossip. Alternatively, you might just be a private person. Whatever the reason for seeking privacy, traveling from Ohio for rehab will reduce your chances of running into someone you know.

You'll have more opportunity to find the right treatment for your exact needs

Whether you want to start with a Partial Hospitalization Program or an Intensive Outpatient Program, you'll have more variety to choose from if you widen your search for treatment beyond your state borders. While Ohio does have some excellent rehab facilities, including Indiana in your search gives you a wider pool to make your selection, making it easy to go to a rehab that matches your needs.

It'll curb impulsive behavior.

Impulsivity is a common trait in addicts and might have contributed to your substance abuse. Those struggling with addiction are known to have poor impulse control and a propensity to take risks and make spur of the moment decisions. This can cause problems, especially during treatment therapy where you'll have to face issues you'd rather not address. If you attend treatment close to home in Ohio, you might yield to the temptation to abandon treatment when things get tough. However, putting some distance between you and home makes it harder for you to quit.

It'll help avoid enabling behavior from loved ones.

It's common for individuals dealing with addiction to form co-dependent relationships with close friends and family. These people might inadvertently enable your addiction by shielding you from facing the consequences of your actions. Traveling to Indiana means that you'll be close enough for your family to visit you and take part in family therapy sessions while giving both parties the space needed to heal and forge stronger relationships.

It'll give you time for self-reflection.
