- 3. What To Expect, Affordable Rehab Center Copays

There are several barriers to receiving treatment for drug or alcohol addiction and one of the biggest is the cost of treatment.

Once you've come to terms with your addiction and accepted that you need treatment, the next step is normally to check around for substance abuse treatment facilities that can assist you to get better. When comparing different rehabs, one of the deciding factors is often the cost of treatment at that facility.

Meeting the Costs of Addiction Treatment

There are various options available when it comes to meeting the costs of rehab. These include:

- Borrowing money from your loved ones.
- Using your savings.
- Using insurance.
- Fundraising or crowdsourcing for funds.
- Applying for a personal loan.
- Applying for treatment scholarships or grants.

Using Insurance To Pay For Addiction Treatment With the enactment of the Affordable Care Act, private insurance companies are required to provide cover for members who seek treatment for substance abuse. This is now considered an essential health care benefit for US citizens. While your insurance provider can't completely deny you coverage for addiction treatment, they may have certain conditions for you to meet before using insurance to pay for your rehab. Insurance plans differ when it comes to the amount and types of treatment they will pay for. Some insurance providers may cover outpatient treatment and family therapy but not residential treatment services. They may also ask those seeking partial hospitalization or intensive outpatient treatment to pay some out-of-pocket costs in form of deductibles, copayments, or coinsurance. Asking the right questions and knowing what your health insurance plan covers before starting rehab can help you avoid unexpected, high treatment costs. What are Copays?

Copayments, often referred to as copays, are an out-of-pocket charge that an insurance provider might require you to pay for a service. Most insurance companies may not cover the complete cost of addiction treatment so what is left is your copay. The amount varies depending on vour insurance plan and level of coverage If you find it too costly, speak to the rehab facility. They are likely to have different payment alternatives such as treatment scholarships, a sliding fee payment plan or even giving you access to private lending to ensure that you can pay for your treatment.
