Nashville, Tennessee has plenty to offer both residents and visitors alike since this is the capital of country music and culture. Unfortunately, like other big cities in the country, Nashville is burdened by addiction especially due to the opioid epidemic.

According to records from the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA), about 218,000 people aged 12 and above used illicit drugs in the past year. This puts a huge burden on both the city and the state.

If you're a resident of Nashville, Tennessee looking for drug rehab, there are several options available. Seeking help for your addiction is the best way for you to set your life back on the right track. However, drug rehab facilities are not all the same and you should spend some time researching before settling on one.

Important questions you should ask before deciding which drug rehab to attend:

Will you travel for rehab or stay local?

This is one of the very first questions you need to answer. Are you going to confine your search to drug rehabs in Nashville or expand your search to other states? Traveling for rehab can emphasize making a fresh start while attending a local rehab means having your support system at hand.

Is the rehab accredited?

Not all rehabs are the same as some are only out to make money from those who are battling addiction. You need to ensure that the rehab you attend has the necessary accreditation and the addiction specialists working there are certified. After all, you are trusting them with an aspect of your life.

What addiction treatment methods does the rehab offer?

Additionally, you should be aware of the different addiction treatment programs available at the rehab center. A good rehab should offer a step-down approach to treatment that involves going from residential treatment to partial hospitalization, intensive outpatient, and finally outpatient treatment. Each of these serves a different purpose as you progress through treatment.

What's the cost of treatment?

Another thing to consider when choosing rehab is the cost of treatment. Does the rehab facility accept your insurance provider and if not, what alternatives are there? Can you meet the costs of treatment out-of-pocket or do you need to look for other ways to pay for the treatment?
